Module Aims
The aim of this module is to build on Developing Midwifery Knowledge 2 and 3 and develop your skills as a scholar. You will explore the impact of health inequalities on mothers, babies and families' health and wellbeing. You will investigate the national and global context and consider ethical, political dimensions of maternity care. You will examine the evidence underpinning practice. The role of interprofessional communication within the public health agenda will be explored, including the use of digital technologies.

Outline Syllabus
Health inequalities and determinants of health, epidemiology, public health and associated inequalities, legal and ethical frameworks, national and global political and social drivers in maternity services, research interpretation, appraisal and application, methodologies, evidence based midwifery practice and the midwife as scholar, interprofessional communication skills, escalation, safety, digital technologies and literacy.

Learning Outcomes
Outcome Number	Description
01	Critically analyse the impact of health inequalities on health and wellbeing.
02	Critically appraise the political and ethical dimensions of maternity care.
03	Analyse and appraise the quality of research in midwifery in order to promote evidence-based practice.
04	Critically appraise knowledge of the principles of interprofessional communication and information sharing in relation to public health, including the utilisation of digital technologies.

Learning, Teaching and Assessment Strategy
Teaching and learning will be supported by a blended approach that utilizes synchronous and asynchronous lectures and seminars to explore and develop theoretical knowledge, critical thinking and shared professional knowledge (learning outcomes (LOs) 1,2,3,4). Problem based learning will support exploration and application of knowledge to the professional context. Seminars will support the application of theory to practice and shared learning (LOs 1,2,3,4). Formative feedback on summative work will be available from your personal academic tutor (PAT). You will also have the opportunity for formative feedback from your peers in group tutorials (LO 1,3). Directed learning will support consolidation of key concepts and theory, including research methodologies. The assessment will enable you to demonstrate knowledge and understanding of the subject areas and their application to midwifery practice. The dissertation will demonstrate your ability to interpret, appraise and apply research findings to your topic of investigation (LO 1, 2, 3). The health promotion resource will demonstrate your knowledge and understanding of accessibility, equality and inclusivity to health promotion resources and interventions (LO 4). Assessment support will be available from your personal academic tutor (PAT) as well as formative opportunity to assess knowledge.
